

Your Space The Emerging World

Diana J.
Ensign
Indianapolis,
Indiana

THE EMERGING WORLD...IS HERE

One thing I've learned as a parent is that change and evolution are constant. It's interesting to think about what we learned in school thirty to fifty years ago—especially compared with the current technology skills of today's average first grader. Now, many children enter kindergarten knowing how to read, count, and maneuver through sophisticated computer games. By the time they enter high school, they're inventing new words to keep up with their fast-paced, ever-changing social media landscape—a landscape that many older generations (myself included) never could have imagined.

The good news is that when I observe my daughters (a sophomore and a senior in high school), I see that they're learning to apply these innovative skills to change things for the better. They care about climate change, they care about fairness, and they adamantly oppose discrimination in all forms—whether it's associated with race, gender, sexual orientation, or religion. They're intelligent. And here's the key: they take into consideration the “group,” not just the individual. That's a huge shift. Facebook may not be what Ernest Holmes and other visionaries imagined when they preached that we're all one and are all interconnected. But the next generation now takes that for granted. No one has to tell them; they already know it. What's exciting is that this advanced mindset translates into addressing social causes in resourceful, creative ways—by methods yet still percolating.

When I observe my daughters, I don't know where their paths will lead them (or us), but I see the emerging new world in their optimism, resilience, quick intelligence, and sense of endless possibilities for lasting change. They believe they can make the future better. I know they are doing so, already.

Your Space

ONE BY ONE

Most of us were not introduced to Science of Mind as children, so we developed negative, untrue perspectives about ourselves and life around us. What glorious epiphanies are experienced by those of us who have emerged from the dark, depressing thoughts of “hell and brimstone” to the resurrecting truth of love and oneness!

Through open hearts eager to know the truth and committed to practicing it, we have the opportunity to manifest not only our own salvation, but also the salvation of every person we come in contact with. Person by person, the truth is shared until all the world is affected. Infused with a positive attitude, gratitude, patience and forgiveness, each interaction we have with another person will result in high vibrations that will magnify and amplify to countless others.

Discovering truth is contagious—once experienced, it has to be shared. One by one, the world will be beneficially influenced and eventually emerge into the freedom of truth.

Your Space

To join the Your Space Community, e-mail your submissions to edit@scienceofmind.com. Include a title, your name, and the town and state where you reside. Submissions will not be returned. Submissions not chosen for publication in the magazine may be published on our website at scienceofmind.com.

Issue

April 2013
May 2013
June 2013

Topic

Fierce Grace
The Divine Ideal
The Mystical Marriage

Deadline

December 1, 2012
January 1, 2013
February 1, 2013

